Released on April 13, 2004, it reached #58 on the Billboard 200 and #2 on the Billboard soundtrack chart in the United States. It also reached the ARIA Top 50 album charts in Australia. It was organized by Tarantino's collaborator, director and personal friend Robert Rodriguez, as well as the WRA of the Wu-Tang clan. The development of Robert Rodriguez was hired by Tarantino to score the film. Rodriguez did it as a favor for his friend, Tarantino, asking him to pay one dollar for his work. Tarantino repaid the service by directing the scene of Rodriguez's Sin City for the same fee. The RSA said of the soundtrack: With Kill Bill I scored and songs, which means that we put a lot of songs into the film from the old records collections, and I composed music for some scenes, natural music. When we killed Bill 2, we brought Robert Rodriguez. Check it out, he took my music and kept the foundation there. With Robert he did not want to remove any of the electronic sounds. He said: No, I was like Take all the electronic stuff, you know, so it might be more like a traditional account. He said, No, man. I like electronic stuff. That's why I wanted to do it. So he took electronic stuff and kept it there and then built orchestration on it, you know what I mean?
